

And we're back...

After a brief hiatus the Journeyman Blog is back.

There's a number of reasons why I took the blog down, some of which I'll be talking about over the next little while. Suffice to say, it needed a reboot.

It needed a reboot in terms of look and feel and operation. You'll notice there's a lot of differences. And please bear with me while I iron out the kinks.

But above all it needed a reboot in terms of content. I was not happy with some of the directions it was going in: reactive rather than initiative, quick and shallow rather than being thoughtful and deep. Now my family and I are in the midst of a transition season, the shape of which is uncertain. Shaking off the detritus, this will be a place to think through the explorations and discoveries that are a necessary part of that.

You will notice, therefore, that a lot of the old content is gone. It's not absolutely gone. I have implemented a means of "expiring content" – which means while it won't be available through the ordinary archive or search mechanisms. But if you still have the original link to old content it will work; I don't like to break the internet. All old content now comes with a caveat: this is a blog, my life has moved on, and my thoughts may have as well.

Thank you reading, and being an audience to a journey. Feel free to share the sights and the sites with me and join me along the way for a bit.

Will.